

FEDERICO BROVELLI

---

Born and raised in Italy with a dual German and Italian citizenship, Federico Brovelli's mixed cultural background and his International educational environment at the European School of Varese, are the main reasons of why he has been always interested in foreign cultures, politics, and economics.

In 2012 Federico decided to pursue his academic path outside his home country and was admitted in the Bachelor of International Studies at Leiden University in the Netherlands. Here he chose to focus on Europe and Economics as his area of studies, as he is convinced that Europe's future and economic interdependence are important for future policy-makers in both the private and public sector. Having graduated in 2015, Federico entered in the cooperative programme between Leiden University and SAIS, and graduated in the Master of International Relations in the former Institution in 2016.

Federico's interests on the impact of economic policy made him move to Madrid in 2014 in order to complete the compulsory internship required by his Bachelor. He worked 5 months in the Business Development Sector of Robert Bosch SLU where he gained a deeper insight of his area of study and the relationship between the different organizations in the private sector and also with the different government agencies.

Since 2012, Federico was also engaged with several conference and organizations, such as the European Hope XXL conference in Leiden and the UN@70 conference in The Hague, where he met distinguished members of both the political and business world. These experiences made him understand about the importance of the collaboration between the public sector, multi-lateral organizations, and the private sector. Finally, Federico was also part of a student consultancy project for the Insurance and Investment group management group Nationale Nederlande in The Hague.

At SAIS Federico is convinced that through the University's well-established network, he will find access to all the more attractive activities in forms of networking cycles and working opportunities. During his Academic experience he has gained interdisciplinary knowledge in economics, history, politics, and cultural studies, both on a global level and specific area. This educational foundation is necessary to understand the dynamics of international governance. Federico values the capacity to think critically to be the most valuable resource of a professional in international governance. SAIS will give Federico this opportunity to learn advanced techniques and strengthen his capacity to conduct policy analysis. Once he will be finished at SAIS, he is open to make further experiences in International Organizations, both private and public. One of his objectives would be to one-day work for the European Union and in the long-term to perhaps work in his home country of Italy.

Federico speaks fluently Italian, German, English, and has a good knowledge of Spanish as well. At SAIS he aims to learn basic French.